BLACK ENTERPRISE has released its listing of the 40 Best Companies for Diversity as featured in the publication's September 2015 issue. While the list showed most companies scoring high marks in senior management and corporate governance, most were found unsatisfactory when it came to procurement dollars spent with firms owned by African Americans and ethnic minorities (demonstrating a critical need to diversify this area).

In 2005, BLACK ENTERPRISE began publishing its list of the "Best Companies for Diversity," identifying those corporations that proved to be the best of the best in executing policies and developing a culture that promoted inclusion for African Americans within their workforce, senior management ranks, corporate boards, and supplier pools. Highlights of this year's list include four companies with black CEOs, 59 black female senior managers, and 72 black board members across companies.

In compiling this year's list, the BLACK ENTERPRISE research team sent surveys to more than 1,000 of the largest publicly traded companies and global companies with significant U.S. operations.
