USPA NEWS - In preamble of next COP22, international negotiators & business leaders gathered in Paris on June 10 for a session of the Business Dialogue to discuss issues of international climate negotiations. On these issues, companies and governments have a common responsibility to ensure their implementation.

In the dynamics of the COP22, international negotiators and business leaders gathered in Paris on June 10 for a session of the Business Dialogue to discuss issues of international climate negotiations. On these issues, companies and governments have a common responsibility to ensure their implementation. Gathered by the Minister Ségolène Royal, President of the COP21, the discussions focused on two main topics of the Paris agreement: the price of carbon and reporting of emissions.------

THE PRIVATE SECTOR PARTICIPANTS AT THE BUSINESS DIALOGUE CALL ------

In summary these exchanges, the private sector participants at the Business Dialogue call:

i) Governments to implement the resolutions on transparency contained in the Paris Agreement, in particular through the harmonization of emissions budgets methodologies.-----

- Coordinate the methodologies used in the preparation of NDCS to allow monitoring and effective reporting,
- To facilitate the external publication of the actions taken and progress made in connection with the Paris Agreement, using the best practices of the UNFCCC.-----
- ii) private sector players to increase transparency on how they take into account the risks and opportunities associated with climate change in their strategies and in their actions.

Increased investment to low-carbon technologies, in line with the objectives of the Paris Agreement, is essential. Informing investors, lenders, suppliers and customers on their climate strategies, companies encourage their stakeholders to join and support their decisions. In addition to improving the quantitative reporting on climate issues, the private sector participants in Business Dialogue support the implementation of initiatives that will help companies improve their transparency, for example: - Communicate on how climate change is taken into account in developing their strategy and their investment policy, - Define, monitor and communicate their emissions reduction trajectory and plan related to adaptation to climate change.------iii) Governments and enterprises to accelerate the deployment of carbon price signals in their economies

- Define, upon ratification of the Paris Agreement, methodologies and tools specific to the mechanisms of emission reduction transfers between countries to gradually link national policies carbon prices internationally,
- Encourage the use of revenue from the carbon price to drive innovation and the transition to low-carbon technologies, while taking into account local conditions and priorities in terms of public policy. Finally, it is also crucial that companies voluntarily adopt an internal carbon price to align investment decisions with long-term objectives set out in the Paris Agreement.
